

BIO

Tairee Parks, known as Thurtdelic, was born in Patterson, New Jersey. With a father who earned his living as a touring musician, Tairee always knew music would be a significant part of his life. Singing in the church choir every weekend helped him develop the discipline and knowledge he needed to become the world-class vocalist he is today.

Throughout the years, Tairee refined his craft, working alongside a variety of skilled musicians across multiple genres. In 2016, he had the chance to collaborate with George Clinton on one of his studio albums. Impressed by Tairee's remarkable talent as both a vocalist and a songwriter, George offered him a recording contract and made him a member of Parliament Funkadelic. As Tairee's role within the band expanded, he adopted the stage name Thurtdelic.

After spending ten years traveling the globe with George Clinton and Parliament Funkadelic, Thurtdelic decided to showcase his own original music for the dedicated fanbase he had gained over the years. Now taking charge of the PFunk legacy, he is forging his path as a solo artist while promoting his critically acclaimed fourth album, 'Psychedelic Therapy.' He recently completed sold-out tours in Japan and Australia and is building incredible momentum in 2026. With upcoming dates in the U.S. and Europe nearing finalization, this year promises to be pivotal for this exceptionally talented artist.
